

Sixth Form Chemist of 2010- Oxfordshire Schools

Schools in Oxfordshire nominated one outstanding Year 13 student for the Sixth Form Chemist of 2010 Award, hosted by Oxford University, The Society of Chemical Industry and the Oxfordshire Independent and State Schools Partnership (OISSP).

Prize-winners were presented with certificates and book tokens at the University of Oxford Physical and Theoretical Chemistry Building, on Thursday 26th November. Parents and teachers joined students on the evening, which included a guided tour of the Chemistry Research Laboratories and a spectacular display of chemical demonstrations by Dr Hugh Cartwright and Dr Malcolm Stewart from the University of Oxford. The awards were presented by Professor Peter Atkins, the well-known Chemistry author, and also from the University.

The Sixth Form Chemist of 2010 Awards is a joint project in increasing scientific awareness and achievement in the community. OISSP is a local collaboration of Independent and Maintained schools in Oxfordshire, working together in raising achievement by sharing information, resources, and partnership activities and events.

Tom Kempton, Project Director of the OISSP, said, 'the event is a chance to celebrate the talent of exceptional students within our county's schools. The University and SCI's involvement will raise aspirations and encourage students to apply their Chemistry skills in higher education and in industry.'
